

HOME DESIGN

The New York Times Magazine

PAGE 100 / FALL 2001

Domesticities

IT TAKES ALL KINDS TO MAKE A HOME

A photograph of a modern loft interior. The space features a large, open-plan layout with a polished, reflective floor. In the foreground, a large, rectangular room is enclosed by glass walls with horizontal blinds, revealing a bed and a desk area. To the left, a dark wooden wall runs along the hallway. In the background, a dark sofa is positioned in front of a large, arched window. The ceiling is white with several track lights. The overall atmosphere is bright and contemporary.

Paradise loft

A SOHO DUPLEX IS THE ULTIMATE PAD FOR THE MODERN BACHELOR — EVEN ONE WITH FIVE CHILDREN. THOMAS BELLER DROPS BY.

Photographs by François Dischinger

The second floor of the loft is actually a steel-and-glass pavilion that was added to the roof of the existing building, with spacious terraces off the living and dining area. The dining table and chairs, as well as the living room's upholstered furniture, are custom-designed.

The upstairs dining area offers sweeping views of lower Manhattan. This photograph was taken two months before the attack that destroyed the World Trade Center.